

FOX IN THE FLOWERS

On July 10, Fairfax City Economic Development unveiled “Fox in the Flowers,” a new mural located at 10407 Main St. in Old Town Fairfax. Designed by Bailey Sullivan, a Richmond-based illustrator known for her bold, floral-inspired artworks, the mural brings color, character, and a strengthened sense of place to the heart of the city.

Commissioned as part of FCED’s expanded focus on placemaking and tourism efforts, Fox in the Flowers celebrates the community’s rich local identity. Situated on the second-story facade of Marlowe Ink Tattoo, above Senberry Bowls, the vibrant artwork features crepe myrtles and dogwoods surrounding the centerpiece: Sneakers the Fairfox, Parks and Recreation’s mascot. The fox, a

Quick Response Prevents Environmental Damage, Maintains Sewer Service

Unlike stormwater runoff which is channeled to streams through unsealed pipes, grassy swales, and concrete ditches, wastewater is conveyed from homes and businesses to the treatment plant in sealed pipes. It's dirty stuff, and the goal is to keep it in the pipes to protect public health and prevent environmental damage.

At 8:30 p.m. on June 10, Patrick Remson, the city's utilities project manager, had just finished a 15-mile mountain bike ride at Wakefield Park. He was cooling off in the parking lot when his phone rang. It was Rene Romero, the city's wastewater operations supervisor, and he had bad news. Santos Lemus, the on-call wastewater tech, had responded to a report of a sewer odor coming from the Andes Drive pump station and had observed water bubbling out of the ground. Popes Head Creek runs adjacent to the pump station, and a sanitary sewer overflow was underway.

Remson mounted his bike and raced home to change clothes and grab his truck. Within an hour

of receiving the complaint, he was on-site with Romero, Lemus, and other members of the emergency response crew. Crew members who were called in to help traveled from as far away as Stafford County. Wastewater management is not a nine-to-five business; things can break at any time of day or night.

The Andes Drive pump station is located just outside Fairfax City limits, where a wet well collects wastewater from about 350 surrounding homes in Fairfax County. The wastewater is pumped uphill to the city's wastewater system, where it then flows downhill toward the treatment plant in Lorton. On a typical weekday evening, residents take baths and showers, wash clothes, run dishwashers, and flush toilets. Basically, a lot of dirty water is generated at this time of night, and some of it had reached the creek. Rain began to fall, and the crew had to act fast to prevent any more wastewater from entering the stream.

After an initial assessment, the crew split into two teams. By 10 p.m., the first team had installed a temporary bypass system, which allowed the neighborhood to maintain uninterrupted sewer service. Sewage was pumped from the wet well into a rotation of three tanker trucks. The trucks safely dumped the diverted wastewater back into the closed system via a nearby manhole. This process continued through the night and into the following day.

The second crew focused on locating the source of the leak, which required moving a storage shed.

The crew began excavating the area where the wastewater was pooling on the ground. Using pressurized water and a vacuum truck to safely dig around buried infrastructure, they located a broken pipe more than 14 feet underground. They installed trench boxes to prevent a cave-in and then climbed into the hole to begin replacing the broken pipe.

The next day, staff from the stormwater operations crew arrived to relieve the initial responders and maintain the pumping operation. A wastewater emergency is an all-hands-on-deck event! About 20 hours after arriving on-site, the team of 25 dedicated Public Works professionals concluded its emergency response and reported the sanitary sewer overflow to the Virginia Department of Environmental Quality.

The wastewater team had previously identified this pipe as a primary candidate for rehabilitation through its asset management program. A contract to reline the pipe was issued earlier this year and planning was underway to begin work, but the pipe failed before work began. The contractor is now proceeding with repairs along the full length of the sewer force main.

JAMIE ERGAS

HOUSING PROGRAM MANAGER

I have worked as the city's housing program manager since January, and I have lived in the city for 16 years. I have dedicated my entire career to housing and homeless services, first for nonprofits and Fairfax County, and now in my own community. While the position is new, it is built on a strong foundation laid by residents, non-profit partners, the faith community, as well as city staff and leadership.

I lead and support city efforts to develop long-term, sustainable solutions to provide the community access to safe, stable, and affordable housing. I enjoy blending big-picture thinking and real-world impact, making changes that make a real difference in people's lives.

I'm excited about launching the Housing and Healthy Communities Advisory Board, which brings together a wealth of expertise and diverse perspectives that can drive progress on affordable housing and homelessness in Fairfax City, and developing the city's first affordable housing and homelessness strategic plan — providing a clear roadmap and strategic framework to guide how we move forward, ensuring our policies and programs effectively meet the needs of our community.

NEW CITY WEBSITE DESIGN

The city in late July launched a redesigned website at fairfaxva.gov to better serve residents and business owners. The web address remains the same, and the new site features a modern layout that is easier to read and navigate, and information is organized to help people complete tasks quickly.

The redesign is the result of more than a year of research, staff collaboration, and community input. Beginning in 2023, the city studied website analytics, heatmaps, user behavior, and community survey responses. This research revealed key challenges, such as difficulty finding information, outdated content, and inconsistent formatting.

Common complaints included:

- Very clunky. Lots of link-clicking to get to what you are looking for. Needs to be streamlined.
- Some items are buried, and it takes a long time to find details.
- Website navigation is not very intuitive for users unless they are very familiar with how city departments are organized.
- Search results can be unreliable.

In response, the city consolidated hundreds of pages, improved search functionality, and reorganized content to reflect how visitors use the site.

KEY FEATURES

STREAMLINED HOMEPAGE

- Make payments online.
- Apply for permits.
- Find events, activities, and meetings.
- Explore current and upcoming projects.
- Report issues through Fairfax City Resolve (Ready311).
- Read city news.
- Find CUE Bus routes and schedules.

PREDICTIVE SEARCH BAR

- If what you need is not on the homepage, use the search bar to find things faster.

RESPONSIVE DESIGN

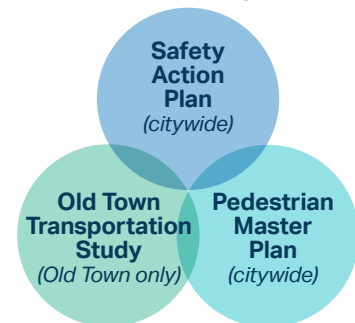

- Because more than half of city website visits occur on mobile devices, the new site was designed to work optimally on both desktop computers and smartphones.

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW

- Update your bookmarks. Some links may have changed due to restructured navigation. Please update your bookmarks for saved pages. If you manage a website that links to the city website, please check your site for possible broken links.
- We want to hear from you. Staff will continue to refine content and features based on user needs and feedback. If you have comments, suggestions, or need help, please email We.Care@fairfaxva.gov with the subject line "New Website."

The city was awarded a federal Safe Streets for All grant to develop a city-wide safety action plan, conduct an Old Town Fairfax circulation study, and develop a citywide pedestrian master plan. A steering committee was established on May 13.

Each plan will have distinct recommendations and priorities, but key areas of overlap include safety analysis, pedestrian needs evaluation, and public engagement. Coordination of these plans will occur under the umbrella project name, "Move Fairfax City."

- Safety Action Plan: Develop recommendations to improve safety for all roadway users: drivers, pedestrians, bicyclists, transit riders.
- Pedestrian Master Plan: Identify priority recommendations for pedestrian network improvements.
- Old Town Fairfax Circulation Study: Evaluate the feasibility of alternative traffic circulation patterns and potential opportunities to improve walkability, connectivity, and safety in Old Town. This study advances recommendations in the Old Town Fairfax Small Area Plan to improve transportation in the activity center.

The project budget is $545,300 ($400K SS4A grant and $150K in local funding). The public engagement period continues through spring 2026, and opportunities to participate will be shared soon. Visit Engage Fairfax for updates.

FOX IN THE FLOWERS

playful and symbolic figure, serves as a nod to the city's charm, history, and welcoming spirit.

"My work is inspired by decorative European folk art," said Sullivan. "I love including lots of florals, animals, and other bits of nature. For this mural in particular, I was inspired by the fable of the fox and the crow. I'm honored to be able to paint in beautiful Old Town Fairfax and hope this piece sparks a little joy for those passing by." Sullivan's work has been featured in a range of prominent media, including book covers, U.S. postage stamps, and even the recently released autobiography of Dolly Parton.

The project is a collaboration between FCED, City of Fairfax Cultural Arts, and the City of Fairfax Commission on the Arts.
